Copyright Policy

Papers are considered for publication provided that they have not been previously published. TWI requests that you should assign copyright in your paper to TWI. If it is the policy of your organisation/company to retain copyright, then TWI requests that you should assign to TWI non-exclusive rights to publish your paper in print or electronic form or both. You will find enclosed a copyright assignment form which you should complete and return to TWI with your paper. This practice protects authors, employers and TWI against unauthorised usage but in no way detracts from retention of copyright in the original intellectual property described in the paper, which remains with the originators. The regulation is waived when copyright is vested in the Crown (UK); papers from Crown servants should be cleared for publication by the HMSO Copyright Unit before submission to TWI.

Copyright law protects intellectual property; it protects the livelihood of the authors and producers of creative works for seventy years after the author's death. This means in practice, that no one may abstract more than 20% of a published work, without the written permission of the publisher. If you are in any doubt contact the publisher.
